MORGANTOWN, W. Va., March 18—The University of North Carolina, ranked second in the nation, reached the semifinals of the National Collegiate Athletic Association basketball championship for the fourth time in the last six years by beating Pennsylvania, the third ranked team, 73-59, today in the East regional final.

N.C.A.A. winner for the last five years, has made the national round of four more often than the Tar Heels in recent years.

For Dean Smith, coach of all four North Carolina semifinal teams, the victory before 10,078 fans in West Virginia University's Coliseum was a tactical success. He followed his pattern of wearing down the opponent by substituting frequently and stressing a quick defense.

Penn, the Ivy League champion for three straight seasons, came to the end of the tournament road just where it was eliminated a year ago in the East finale. The Quakers were ousted in the first round two years ago.

Chamberlain Stands Out

This meant extreme frustration for the key Penn seniors—Corky Calhoun, Bob Morse and Alan Cotler—who ended their varsity careers. The game was particularly frustrating for Calhoun as one of the outstanding North Carolina performances was turned in by Bill Chamberlain, the senior from New York City. Chamberlain defended against Penn's star so well that he scored only 7 points.

In a game that was called "a necessary evil" by Jack Kraft, the Villanova coach, South Carolina defeated Villanova, 90-78, for the consolation East prize. Tom Riker, who was stymied by North Carolina in the semifinals Thursday night, scored 36 points for the Gamecocks.

It has been a long season for North Carolina, as is always the case with the Atlantic Coast Conference champion that manages to get this far in the N.C.A.A. tournament. Not only did the Tar Heels win the regular-season competition in the A.C.C., but then they had to win the A.C.C. playoffs a week ago to get into the national tourney.

Penn trailed by only 2 points at half-time, 37-35. With three foul shots and a 15-foot floor shot by Morse, the Quakers managed to gain the only tie of the game at 40-all after 4 minutes of the second half.

At that point, Dennis Wuycik, a native Pennsylvanian, scored 5 straight points on a 3-point play and a fine inside drive, taking a pass from Steve Previs on the fast break. From then on the Tar Heels were at their best with a quick, bothersome defense and a fast attack that thwarted the Quakers.

Wuycik, who has the best field-goal percentage of 61.9 in the nation, hit on seven of 12 field-goal shots and four of five free throws for 18 points to become the game's high scorer. He was named the East regional tourney's most valuable player.

The North Carolina defense was so effective that Penn's team field-goal percentage was very poor—37.5 for the game. During the first 14 minutes of the second half, the Quakers managed to score on only three field-goal shots. They hit on just eight of 32 for 25 per cent during the entire second half.

Although Penn used eight players in the game, the Quakers count on their first five for victory. An indication of their problem was the fact that their seventh man, Ron Billingslea, scored 12 points and managed some important long shots that kept Penn within range midway in the game.

Calhoun was not able to do well inside or even get off good outside shots, so Billingslea filled some of the gap. Morse had 14 points and Phil Hankinson 12 for the Quakers.

Penn was also hampered by having to change its mode of operation from its usual man-to-man defense to a zone that was good but not good enough. The racing, relay-style Tar Heels changed personnel so rapidly that Smith called on 11 players during the first seven minutes.

This kept the pace in high. Penn, in trying to keep up, committed too many early fouls to remain in its normal man-to-man defense. The switch to the zone didn't really stop North Carolina from getting inside or hitting from outside. It did prevent Penn from losing more than one of its players on fouls, however. Hankinson had to leave with five personals.
